Category:Protocols Category:Diagnostic computer programs Category:Auto partsComputer networks, such as the Internet, are becoming increasingly useful to individuals and companies alike. A company can easily market its products and services electronically to geographically diverse customers, while individuals can easily access news stories and obtain information about political candidates, health risks, and other matters that were not previously possible. However, individuals and companies can also inadvertently give away their personal information on the Internet to would-be hackers and others who wish to use such information against them. In addition, sensitive data such as social security numbers, credit card numbers, and even passwords can be misused by unscrupulous individuals. In addition, currently available methods for authenticating identities on the Internet can be used to perpetrate identity theft or other identity fraud. For these and other reasons, companies and individuals are seeking other techniques for protecting data from unauthorized access and for authenticating identities on the Internet. For the purposes of this disclosure, the term “entity” shall refer to a company or individual in general. For example, the entity can be an individual, such as an individual who is using a computer at a workplace or a university f678ea9f9e
