MONTGOMERY, Ala. -- Alabama lawmakers are scrambling to prevent their state from being the only one in the South to continue prosecuting people for bigamy, incest, and polygamy. The last-gasp effort is part of lawmakers' push to block federal recognition of gay marriage. The Alabama House of Representatives voted yesterday to extend a 30-day period during which the Legislature can act on the issue of gay marriage, in a vote of 54 to 48. The Senate, which is GOP-controlled, is expected to vote on the same measure next week. Under the plan, which does not require legislative approval, the state could tell federal courts that it believes civil unions already legally exist and already protect gay couples in terms of benefits, and that the federal government therefore has no right to rule the state's institutions must offer the same benefits to same-sex couples. "There are civil unions in Alabama, and in my opinion, the civil unions are the closest thing to marriage that we have in Alabama," said Rep. Earl Hilliard, D-Montgomery. "We don't need to be dragged into something that we don't want to do." A spokeswoman for the governor said the administration was still reviewing the bill. Her comments came after a group of bipartisan lawmakers from the governor's own party said they supported the change. But 50b96ab0b6
