cant get game to run cant get any help this sucks. I really felt that Little Crane had come home to roost when I heard about the PC release - finally, this well-thought fun series could shed its technical limitations and esoteric (albeit charming) control scheme. Sadly, this version (i.e the one included with the day one release) falls short. First impressions are weak indeed, with no keyboard control over the camera (and this being totally essential for even the first mission), and a highly limited soundset(simply put, the engine noise loop is too short and rather grating when it's the only sound in the world). After connecting a 360 Pad to enjoy the controller support (which is indeed global, sufficent to select a level and navigate the limited options) things improved somewhat, the responsive controls very reminiscent of the mobile version. Also reminiscent of the mobile version, however, is the very limited draw distance - keeping track of your surroundings when away from buildings is a bit of a challenge, though the authenticity of the minimap is welcome! I'll curtail this review and give you some basic ups and downs. UP: Physics are pretty solid and the vehicles feel like the chunky toys they're modeled after. Still has some of the charm from the small-screen editions. Nice, relatively readable UI font (Think of the Wip3out font only you can actually read it). Cross platform! Any game that runs on Linux is very welcome! DOWN: Very weak and limited sound set. Limited fun without a controller. Small selection of levels and no free-play option (nor is there a level editor). No configuration except from the most basic and essential (The stick configuration bent my brain at first, Turning on left-stick steering really helped!) 360 pad is not really a precise enough controller. I would love to break out the twin joysticks and set the game up to use them, but alas this isn't a supported option. In summary: I feel like this is still a tech demo, and that it's swinging above it's station somewhat in price. Wait until it's 50% off and I'd say you've got a game that will provide a few hours of entertainment (with the sounds turned off and some music in the background), at least until you've beaten all the levels and had some fun plowing up the biggest clay-ball you can in the dozer. I wish I could be more middling on my appraisal of the game, so take this to be an "it's okay" review, rather than an outright positive one.. For a really crappy port to PC, I would give it a 5/10. mostly because of the performance issues and somewhat bad controls.. Very good game I love it I bought the mobile version, And i wish they added Those vehicles, but overall Great game! I have one problem though If i collect too many dirt or stone particles my FPS Turns to absolute crap. Insert Helpful review here. The little crane that could. It's a fun game, isn't easy, but you won't be pulling your hair out, or taking a hammer to your computer. Once you finish the levels, you can have some fun in the sandbox mode, which is exactly what it sounds like. You are in a box of sand, only unlike most games, you get to move the sand. You have an assortment of vehicles, which is a pickup truck, a flatbed with side guards, a crane on a flatbed, an excavator, and your dozer. They feature full control, which is rotation, elevation, bending, length, and your attachment (bucket or claw). With that, you can make just about whatever you want to in the dirt, such as tunnels and circuits for your pickup truck. Overall, I would recommend this game to a friend, and the price is right for the "budget players". fair warning while moving the dirt, you will lag quite a bit. I average about 30 fps on a laptop, and will get down to 8-12 when moving dirt. Oh, let me edit this to include the developer into the picture. This guy is awesome. He helped me to get this game to run when it did not. He listens to the customers and implements what they want.
